

Paris: New and Unique

The Paris hotel scene has never looked better. The ultra-luxe category of palaces — now a dazzling dozen — continues to raise the plush factor. Case in point: Hôtel de Crillon's new Nonos et Comestibles restaurant by top chef Paul Pairet, and at the Ritz, the reimagined spa unveiled last summer. What's more, a new crop of design-driven properties with personality are enlivening diverse districts. Here's a look at a trio of new neighborhood gems.

The year ahead in Paris will bring a number of hotly anticipated hotels to the scene. On our radar: Le Grand Mazarin, opening in early 2023 in a coveted Marais location near the Hotel de Ville. This will be the first Parisian address for Maisons Pariente, the family-owned hospitality group (Patrick Pariente was the co-founder of the Naf Naf clothing brand) whose portfolio comprises the Crillon Le Brave in Provence, Lou Pinet in Saint-Tropez and Le Coucou in Méribel. Top designer Martin Brudnizki styled the interiors, including 50 guestrooms and 11 suites. Also expect a spa and pool. Called Boubalé, the Mediterranean restaurant will be overseen by Assaf Granit, the Israeli chef behind some of the city's hottest restaurants (Shabour and Tekés). For bookings, luxury travel advisors can reach out to Stéphanie Lancien (s.lancien@maisonspariente.com), the collection's sales director .
