The results are in: 2022 has been a banner year for luxury travel. Five-star hotels around the world hit record rates, with Caribbean luxury class properties hitting an average of $507.94 this summer versus $238.65 in 2019, per global hospitality data tracking firm STR. The demand for plush crashpads like these is propelling the pipeline for 2023; we've roamed the world looking for the best new properties on the horizon, culling down the list until we arrived at the 40 must-see spots. We've unearthed a raft of exciting new hotels, from two contrasting hideaways on the Med's buzziest island to Africa's newest buyout-primed lodge— we've even sneaked in a few cruise ships that might lure you to ditch a charter in favor of a voyage onboard.

A gem of a hotel, quite literally. It's named after the 19-carat pink diamond which once was a centerpiece of the French crown jewels; this 61-room property sits two blocks from the Seine on the Rue des Archives in the heart of the Marais. It's the first city center property from the French luxury hotel chainlet, Maisons Pariente, run by real estate mogul Patrick and his daughters Leslie and Kimberly and known for hotels like Crillon Le Brave in Provence. It has been designed by Martin Brudnizki, the go-to-glam-meister for high-end hospitality; it's intended to evoke the home of a fictitious salon hostess, equal parts wealthy and well-read—think flouncy prints, overstuffed furniture and moiré silk lined walls.
